The fix, she said, must start at home.

Attorney General Aaron Ford, also black, said the issues Floyd's death brought forward are not new. At the same time, he said as Nevada's top law enforcement officer, violence against people or property cannot be tolerated.

"The right to protest does not extend to a right to commit acts of violence. I will not condone acts of violence against police officers and against property."

He called on all to work together to create and restore trust in law enforcement and discussions to find solutions including legislative action.

Assembly Speaker Jason Frierson, D-Las Vegas, said that means specific policies. He said in the 2019 Legislature they voted to require de-escalation training and implicit bias training but that regulations still haven't been put in place to see that through.

"That's a problem," said Frierson, Nevada's first black Assembly speaker.

He and Ford said the AG's office should have the same power the federal Justice Department has to require bias training for prosecutors and law enforcement. Moreno said officers have to have a psychological evaluation before they are hired and an annual physical. She suggested that psychological evaluation should be annual as well.

Carson City Clerk/Recorder Aubrey Rowlett said Friday her office is doing everything possible to release election results when the polls close at 7 p.m. June 9.

She said that includes reports on how the mail-in vote went. To do so, she said her office, like most other clerks in Nevada, is already entering the mail-in ballots they've received into the computer.

"We're reading ballots" report so see how many people voted and who they voted for.

"I don't see we're going to have any issue election night getting the results out."

But that only applies to county election results.

Statewide results are

"Election night, we're going to release the county-wide results," she said, adding that there will be a link on her website directing people to the Secretary of State's website for statewide and multi-county results.

Rowlett said her office is exactly when they will have final numbers for the various races on the ballot.

The issue there, as always will be Clark and Washoe counties that, between them, account for about 90 percent of total votes in any given election.

She said she will do her
